

Jonathan Powell is a composer, pianist and writer on music. Self-taught as a composer, he first performed his works at the Brighton Festival and at Dartington in 1989. Since then, he has received performances and commissions from leading exponents of new music including the London Sinfonietta, the Composers Ensemble, Jane Manning and Valdine Anderson, as well as the pianists Stephen Gutman, Nicolas Hodges and Thomas Adès. His works have been heard at the Aldeburgh, Almeida, Bath, Cheltenham and Huddersfield festivals, the South Bank Centre and the BBC Radio Theatre as well as in continental Europe, Japan, Australia and the US. As a pianist, he is in demand as a recording artist and concert recitalist: recent engagements have taken him to Italy, Finland and the Netherlands, while next year will see him perform across the UK and the US. He has published articles on Scriabin, the Russian Piano School, Ciurlionis, Feinberg, Stanchinsky and Futurism.

Powell began the composition of his Second Quartet in June 2001, but the work was not completed until March 2003, a timespan unusual for a composer who often writes very quickly. The work is Powell's largest to date, and it is likely that the creative challenge presented by the sheer size of this one-movement structure (probably up to half an hour in duration) is partly responsible for the piece's long gestation.

The first large section of the quartet consists of four distinct episodes which build up in intensity: the first of these emerges from two pitches, the second from a series of chords, the third (beginning quietly) from a combination of these, and the fourth (beginning raucously) from rhythmic elaborations. As the music reaches seemingly improbable levels of density, a release of pressure allows melodic elements to gradually predominate in a series of tableaux (starting with a solo on the 'cello); these may be likened to arias, perhaps interspersed with variations or interludes. By three-quarters of the way through the piece, the energy that had characterised the earlier climactic moments has totalled dissipated; in the final moment of repose before rebirth, one pitch remains – a seed from which the processes of the work are regenerated, in a manner relative to, but distinct from earlier procedures. Thus, towards the end, the music comes 'full circle' as it regains earlier energy levels but, instead of continuing around the loop, it veers off into trajectories that are ultimately self-destructive.

Second String Quartet

Written for the Arditti Quartet
Commissioned by the BBC
Dedicated to Hilary Robinson
